##Writing Task 2 - Blog Post Write an introduction to an informative blog post titled "Looking Ahead". Put your blog post title here so if you submit it you will know which one has been submitted.  Instructions: Write about 1600 words. Include at least five texts/literature sources, appropriate headings and sub-headings, lists where appropriate, the five stages of writing process correctly. Your blog should be well-structured so it is easy for readers to navigate around the page. Use sub-headings to break up text into different paragraphs. You do not have to use large or small tags but you may use them if you wish. Search engines look for them as signals that your page is relevant to certain topics and people will click on them if they are interesting enough. Headings should be relevant and descriptive, not just to your blog's theme, but to information in the posts. Use a minimum of two headings for each major section. All headings should start with an initial capital letter. If you use a lot of headings, go for a large font size. Include at least one image in your post - preferably more - to make it easier for readers to see what you are talking about and to add interest. In terms of content, the most important part is the introduction. It should introduce readers to the topic and set out why this paper is interesting or unique or special or whatever else you want to say about it. It should also deal with the main topic. Your main body should be about half the words of your blog post. If you are blogging about five pieces of literature, then you need to cover two in your main body. You can simply copy and paste sections from your notes into the body area, but remember that when copying information form a text, make sure it is in quotation marks and has a reference attached to it. Make sure you include an introduction. This section should include highlights or key points from your blog post featured above it - not just detailed ideas or full sentences, but references to each point set out by headings. Your conclusion needs to sum up all the key points from what you have written before. It should be clear and concise - no need for flowery language or unnecessary information. Some examiners like to see a section on 'criticisms' of the literature you have chosen to use, so if they are long texts, try and think of some criticisms you could make. You can also include an 'evidence' section with your references. This is the most interesting part of the blog post as it gives your audience a chance to form their own opinions and respond to any arguments you have made. Your blog post should be well-structured so it is easy for readers to navigate around the page. The Raid Redemption English 720p Brrip Torrent Download
